Does the City regulate water pressure throughout the day?

Procedure in Place

The City does not regulate water pressure throughout the day. Our pressure is set by our tank elevations in town and depending on the elevation of your home determines what water pressure you will have. If you are around Lake Hartwell elevation, your water pressure will be higher. If your home is on a higher elevation, your pressure will be lower. We maintain adequate pressure in our system so that we do not go below the SCDHEC required minimum pressure. Your water pressure can vary throughout the day depending upon the height of the water in the tanks and whether the pumps are on or not. This variation usually would be less than 6 - 7 PSI.

We receive our water from the Anderson Regional Joint Water System, (ARJWS), and they pump it to us from Anderson. There are water tanks around Pendleton Road that receive the water and they are basically all the same elevation. These tanks help to maintain our pressure and give us water storage.

We actually have two distinct pressure zones in Clemson which we call the Clemson System (low pressure) and the high pressure Zone which is basically the Old East Clemson Water System which is along Hwy 93. We pump the water up to the high pressure zone to the water tank on West Lane from the low pressure zone. This zone feeds the East Clemson area and can supply water to the Town of Central to their tank on Hwy 93.

This property totals 4.41 acres and is directly across from Ashley Dearing Park and Tottie's Place. This purchase will help preserve greenspace within the City, prevent development in the existing floodplain, and to provide a location to extend our parks system by creating a passive park with connections to the Green Crescent Trail.
